Type 1 diabetes results from an autoimmune response to one or more self-antigens that mediate beta cell destruction. This article presents a brief overview of the relevant autoantigens--including the islet-specific protein glutamic acid decarboxylase (GAD), glucose-dependent insulinotropic polypeptide (GIP), insulin, and insulin receptors--with which these autoantigens are associated. The major mechanisms of beta cell destruction involve activation of T cells that recognize these self-antigens presented in association with major histocompatibility complex (MHC) proteins. In addition to the autoantigens themselves, other islet autoantigens include islet-specific transcription factors, heat-shock proteins, and other intracellular proteins. The evidence presented indicates that the precursor of type 1 diabetes involves multiple genetic and environmental factors, and it is likely that there are multiple mechanisms and distinct stages that contribute to the development of type 1 diabetes. 1: 1-10.
