affect your financial life, and what you and your children can do to make it easier for you all. You'll get a series of short lessons delivered over the course of a week - each delivered by either one of our lecturers or an entertaining and lively comic who will make you laugh and cry. You'll get to learn about all sorts of money-related issues, including: what money means to your family, how to pay your rent, how to pay your bills, how to save and get a loan, how to save money, how to invest your money and even how to get a loan to improve your house. All to make it easier for you to keep your cash in your wallet and your wallet in your pocket, week by week! * This is a 4 hour course. It has been delivered in partnership with the same company who deliver the course in the UK, and who have been instructed to keep the details of the programme exactly the same. This company have been vetted by the British Standards Institution, and they offer courses in the home, the workplace, in prisons and in the community. In the first lesson, you will be invited to introduce yourself to your children and the course, and to your partner. In the second lesson, you will learn about the things you can do to ensure that you all stay in the money game, and even have some fun doing it. In the third lesson, you will learn the three steps you can use to make your finances work for you. In the fourth lesson, you will learn about something that none of you would guess is one of the biggest causes of friction between you and your partner: your underwear. Finally, in the fifth lesson, you will learn about some of the things your children can do to make your life easier, and a bit cheaper. Who is it for?

The genome of the estrogen receptor alpha gene (ESR1) reveals clues on the evolutionary origins of the ESR1 gene. A genome-wide scan for the presence of estrogen-response elements (EREs) using the database of MatInspector identified a single ERE in the first intron of the estrogen receptor alpha gene (ESR1) on chromosome 6p21.1. However, sequence analysis revealed that this was a "promoterless" ERE, the sequence is also within a segment of 3'-untranslated region. The sequence of this ERE was found to be highly conserved in the human, mouse, and rat genomes. A search in the rhesus monkey genome revealed the presence of an approximately 1.5-kb segment in intron 1 of ESR1, very close to the conserved human ERE. Phylogenetic analysis indicates that ESR1 arose on the primate lineage, around 13 million years ago, and that the segment in intron 1 has been evolutionarily conserved since its origin. Analysis of ESR1 promoter haplotypes in three human populations (Irish, Spanish, and Sardinian) reveals that the ERE in intron 1 is frequently polymorphic, and appears to have arisen in the human lineage. An intronic ERE is also identified in the first intron of the human alpha estrogen receptor gene (ESR2).

Q: Automapper in MVC 5 what is the correct syntax

Hi I'm very new to the world of MVC but want to use it and use Automapper. I've been given a simple but large project to work on. I'm working on the data access layer and the controllers, while the business logic is left to the client (who is a web developer). I'm told to work on the project to have a robust backend for said web app. I'm getting a bit lost with the Automapper syntax, what I have is:

namespace Desktop.Framework.Data.Entities { [global::System.Data.Linq.Mapping.Table("Customer")] public partial class Customer { public Customer() {
