Q: C# data binding to a command that generates table-entries I try to do some data binding for a Winforms-Project but that is much more complicated for me than I thought. So, I created a new Winforms-Project, removed all code, and tried to implement what I want to do in there. My winforms looks like: I want to bind a string-array and a int-array to a UI-element that shows all numbers in the textbox in a table. Does anybody knows a solution for this? Thank you A: Is this what you want? (This is an answer of an additional question you asked, but it might help you anyway) if yes, you can use a ListView: //Constructor (array of strings is not needed here) public Form1() { InitializeComponent(); listView1.DataSource = MyClass; } class MyClass : List { public List List {get;set;} } public Form1() { InitializeComponent(); } //Or using ctor-injection: public Form1(List list) { InitializeComponent(); listView1.DataSource = list; }
