A spokesman for the Singapore Food and Drugs Authority (SFDA) said this on Tuesday (July 30) after a consumer reported a problem with a packet of doughnuts. He said that while the product was made at the same factory, which produces more than 50 types of doughnuts for their customers, the problem happened to a batch that the company did not sell. Since yesterday, the company has informed the agency that it will change its packaging design and that the packaging should now bear the required information. The spokesman also said that the SFDA will continue to monitor the company to ensure that similar errors do not happen in the future. This is not the first time the agency has said that the calories information should be clearly displayed. In 2011, Singaporeans were shocked after a widely circulated online video showed that a packet of the popular Chaozhou fried wheat cake sold by four retail chains in Singapore had no calorie information on it. The then Minister for Health, Tharman Shanmugaratnam, ordered the food industry to improve the calories information on food packages. The SFDA also updated its website to state that companies are required to display the weight and calories information on food product packaging. The spokesman said that the agency has also reminded retailers and consumers that measuring cups and weights should be used while weighing food products sold in Singapore. The SFDA also advises consumers not to bring any foreign measurement scales to Singapore as these are banned from importation into the country. #include "z_en_nasta.h" #define FLAGS 0x00000010 #define THIS ((EnNasta*)this) void EnNasta::Actor* this->GlobalContext* 3da54e8ca3
