myosin light chain kinase (MLCK) gene have been cloned and characterized. The gene spans about 18 kb and is composed of 16 exons spanning 7.6 kb. The transcripts of this gene, which are slightly bigger than the protein itself, have both 5' and 3' untranslated regions. The 5' untranslated region is encoded by 5-11 bp and the 3' untranslated region by 477 bp. The 5'-most exon (exon 1) contains the initiation codon in all three species, whereas the other 15 exons do not differ considerably from each other. The promoter region includes the TATA box, the GC-rich elements and several potential binding sites for transcription factors. The 5'-most exon was isolated in a phage clone and shown to be transcribed in vitro, suggesting the existence of a bidirectional promoter. In spite of the high degree of sequence conservation, two polymorphisms were identified in the promoter region in human genomic DNA. The organization of the gene in all three species is compared. Radiographic evaluation of the femur after total hip arthroplasty: the effect of implant position. As the size of the femur declines, the calcaneal trabecular bone becomes flatter. In a series of fifty-seven patients with revision total hip arthroplasties, all bone densities were measured on anteroposterior hip radiographs. Eighty-three percent had one or more distal femur densities less than 35 percent of average bone density.

The radiographic appearance of the implant position was assessed in the second year after revision. The average position of the implant was 1.5 cm proximal to the trochanteric region, with a central position of 0.15 3da54e8ca3
