(intuitively) "bounded sequences of numbers only have finitely many non-zero terms" "a sequence of rational numbers will have infinitely many terms". Therefore, the sequence of all rational numbers cannot be dense on the number line. Please correct me if I'm wrong! A: This is correct, since a bounded sequence is eventually constant, and rational numbers are not constant. As a counter example to your last statement, you could also take a sequence of irrational numbers, and it would work. A: Rational numbers are dense. In fact, \mathbb{Q} and \mathbb{Q} implies \mathbb{Z} and therefore $\left[a-b, a-b+\frac{1}{b} \right)$. The former intervals form a finite partition of \mathbb{R} , and therefore only a finite number of
