

... They were unable to control themselves, so they began to copulate without moving, for they had no strength to leave. And so it was from the beginning of time. Each of them was like a divine being and each was like a human being. None of them had a name, for each of them called it what he wanted, and as it pleased one, so it was called by the others. And they had women, and there were countless numbers of them, and they all loved them, and they all loved each of them, but each loved as she wanted.
