Howard Jones at The Globe and Mail: The last thing we need are any more roadblocks. They tend to be annoying and unnecessary. — Howard Jones, Feb. 18, 2014 Given the fact that Ontario is now a hockey market, I thought it would be a good time to revisit the question of roadblocks. The province has announced that there will be construction closures of the Gardiner Expressway, DVP and Gardiner, Don Valley Parkway and the Lake Shore and Wellington expressways. There is no doubt that these roadblocks will be annoying, but they will also add to that three-ring circus of a transportation system that we have in this city. What was the point of being a hockey market if we are just going to add roadblocks? If we are to be a hockey market, then we have to come to grips with the fact that people going to games will be from all over the province and visiting the city in the process. These roadblocks are absolutely necessary if we are to avoid a hockey traffic nightmare that will cause the length of the Gardiner (if not the DVP) to close. They must take place now and not again next year or the following year. If we are a hockey market, then there will be times when fans need to commute to the game. As unpleasant as it may be for drivers, it must be done. This is why roadblocks are necessary. I've written before about our traffic problem, and the fact that there can be no easing of the situation. We cannot let our population grow past a certain point because that population growth will make the traffic problem worse. The roadblocks are a sign of desperation. The province does not have the money to increase transit capacity in Toronto because, after all, it is a budgetary crisis. Rather than attempt to come up with the millions necessary to fix the transit system, they have decided to give money to car-centric politicians who promise to solve the problem. The roadblocks, of course, will have the added benefit of making everyday commute even worse. Drivers will be added to the queue on a regular basis and will have to endure congestion and peak hour bans on the Gardiner and elsewhere. Loading... Loading... Loading... Loading... Loading... roadblock would be an essential part of any solution to our traffic problem, but, sadly, it is only occurring now. Read more about:Ibrahim

By coach. 1997..Handbook for Coach's.Recommended Posts As an international entreger I can say for myself that having all this information about the EU in one place will be a real benefit to me! There are a couple of things I find weird about it all, I will try and address those here. 1. There is an EU collection team that apparently collects the data and makes it available, do they have a patent for that? I know I could not do something like that, I would be threatened with a lawsuit! 2. How is it that the EU will change how they operate as to do this the first time they have to go through the EU Committee and take it back to the member states? Like I said before I would be told by the national people that I am violating their laws by compiling this information. 3. It seems to me that the EU is spending millions of Euros on this research, seeing as there are several proposals of implementing it already I don't know how they are going to make that much money. I guess that's a question for another forum, I have to ask myself what data are they trying to collect that they cannot make a profit on yet? 4. I am not really understanding this thing. I thought that the EU is about to change their laws to allow the UK to leave, I thought this meant that they were joining the EU. 5. Perhaps this was my first mistake, I will have to wait and see. 6. I am not really sure why a national government is allowed to work with a private company to gather this information, all they really have to do is ask a national government about the information collected. 7. It all seems so, so fishy, I do not know how many of these data dumps are actually sourced from leaks, or why the EU is spending so much money to do it, what is the point? 1. I can't answer this question as the most I can do is comment on it. 2. What I don't understand is that once the EU Committee had approved it the national governments would be in trouble. They would be put under pressure to either ask the EU for a repeat of this or just have their laws changed. Their situation would be even more vulnerable to the law of the majority. See it from my point of view as that is the way 82138339de
