Typically this means that when a person goes to a pub, they are there to drink beer. If the group spends their time socialising, eating, or doing any other activities, beer is typically in short supply. For an average Irish person to go to a pub or bar, they have most likely sat in their car before heading there. Since the state mandate that all vehicles sell alcohol inside until it is close to closing time, this rule applies to most of the pubs as well. A quick walk to the nearest pub or bar is the norm for most people, with some people living outside the city or city areas with a pub a quarter-of-a-mile away. Starting with a draft beer and moving onto a Guinness, a pub offering a wide variety of beer is a typical sight in Ireland. Unfortunately, most Irish pubs have not been able to sustain themselves in the face of competition from fast food and alehouses. The Irish tradition of drinking beer while talking has been replaced with a combination of listening to sport and doing a little bit of casual drinking. When the group is ready for a pint, a barman pushes a bottle into a glass. Typically, it will be a pint of Guinness, Murphy's stout, or Harp Lager. The most common way to drink alcohol in Ireland is through beer drinking. Pints are what most people will be drinking. The pint is a 14 oz. glass, generally referred to as a "16." The pint in the United States is an 8 oz. glass. This difference is due to British tradition.

City Manager Harry Black at a Sept. 18 community discussion on the city's ongoing issue with the unaddressed mental health issues in the city. Photo Courtesy Harry Black Harry Black is a reserved presence, but when the cameras are off, his charisma turns to charisma with a dedication to change that is rare. He is our City Manager, our CEO, our President. A new beginning in a city of its size and history. He is directly in the picture, arms crossed, eyes focused, as he declares City Hall a "change-making facility." For as long as he's been the city manager he has had that slightly Hollywood, pre-CGI look that many dream of: "director" and "producer" combined. Yet, this is not about his looks, it's about what he is doing to lead his city. His first two years have been devoted to issues that few city managers (certainly none in this size of city) have been willing to touch. This is an ongoing battle that Black will not give up and neither will we in the faith community. Black has initiated a mental health initiative, started a re-medication board, opened the city's first Advocacy Center, and launched the city's first neighborhood mental health initiative. He has said that he will not relent until the city has a database in place where the city can track the information needed to address mental health issues in a timely and consistent manner. With the Envision Petaluma campaign coming to the forefront and Black's advocacy for our community in these projects 82138339de
