class Remove Q: How do I debug dynamically generated.asp pages? I have an ASP page that is dynamically generated using ejs. foo My understanding is that the generated HTML would be something like this: foo If I view the source of the generated HTML, it just says foo. How can I debug this situation? I have tried adding a breakpoint at the start of the ASP page, but it never reaches this point, so it never hits the if statement. What am I doing wrong? A: Right click the page, click "View Page Source" and then look at the HTML/JS that it is actually generating. You will probably find that the JS and HTML is 'appending' to the div you have in the page. You are looking at the page source and just expect it to be as if you opened it and hit F12 - it isn't. Q: What is the argument against returning String.Empty? What is the argument against returning String.Empty? Is it because we might be using the string.Empty at a later point and we want to ensure there isn't a memory leak? A: Strings are immutable, that means they cannot be changed. Given that, what happens if you return empty string? string[] array = new string[10]; array[0] = ""; What will be the state of the array? Will its first element be empty string? No, it won't. The array state will always be "[10]", regardless of what you do with the individual elements. The only case this makes sense, is
