online May 1, 2002. And it was a big success, so we will be doing it again. StarWars.com staff, columnists, industry experts, and other special guests will gather to hear your nominations for the best in Star Wars fandom. So, what's new? We're kicking off the show with a few improvements to the existing criteria. These changes are meant to make the show even better. First, we're adding two new categories: "How I Spent My Time" and "Best Roleplaying Game." For the first one, we've added a slot in the opening segment. It's for any game you've played that was particularly memorable. And for the second, we're looking for the best roleplaying game system. Next, we're adding two new awards categories: "Best Fictional Character of All Time" and "Best All-Time Themed Movie" (because, you know, we like all-time movies). Last, we're adding a new award: "The Best Model in the Entire Universe." This is for the best piece of fan art ever made, in the entire universe. So how do you get nominated? This year, we're inviting you to nominate as many people as you want, using the form right here. And you're more than welcome to nominate yourself! We'll also accept nominations of things you would like to see nominated for awards, in categories that you think are important. The more you nominate, the more people are likely to show up and vote, and the more your nominations will be likely to impact the show. So keep those nominations coming, and good luck!Serotonin transporter ca3bfb1094

A few days after the general election, instead of the usual post-mortem, a panel of respectable journalists and academics gathered at the Institute of Politics at Harvard University to hear an expert on how Americans voted. After Trump's victory, he was not there. "We should be looking at the Russian hackers who are responsible for getting Trump elected," Eric Edelman, a Harvard political science professor and the co-founder of United States Cyber Consequences Unit, a military advisory group, said at a panel the night after the vote. The Russian president, Vladimir Putin, is "responsible for electoral politics today," he said, because he has "just decided that he is going to interfere in the United States of America." The panelists agreed that Putin had something to do with Trump's victory. But they worried that the Democrats and the press weren't doing enough to take on the Kremlin. "The press is way too worried about what the next story is," said Eileen Nearne, a professor at Georgetown Law School who specializes in information warfare. "The press is not as interested in this as the public is." Another panelist, fellow professor Nicholas Thompson, emphasized that fighting back with technical means is important, but ultimately futile. He noted that the United States has long been seen as a technological superpower, which it is. But it has lost the lead in the space race, in cyberwarfare, and in offensive online attacks, he said. "The United States no longer is a cybered sovereign state," he said. Russia is doing its best to regain that lead. "The problem is not that they are doing more attacks on our networks; the problem is that we are not responding to them," said Stephen Kim, a
