History The AutoCAD history dates back to 1979 when AutoCAD's creators, John Walker, Ed Simpkins, and others started to work on a graphics system that could run on a microcomputer. This meant that customers would no longer have to buy the PDS package to obtain AutoCAD. Also in 1983, Bill Cole joined the AutoCAD team. Cole did not come from the graphics industry and would later serve as AutoCAD's first head of marketing. The first year of AutoCAD in the business was 1984, which was an important year for AutoCAD. The 1990s marked the start of a new decade and the start of a new century, as AutoCAD was one of the first desktop CAD programs to come out with the industry standard format for file compression, the Portable Document Format (PDF). Also in the 1990s, AutoCAD started to look a lot different. The graphics engine, Raster, was replaced with the vector engine. This led to the emergence of a new type of design: vector-based, and not raster-based. Two years later, a new version of AutoCAD was introduced. The software was re-engineered as an all-in-one solution, where all the software needed to create a project was incorporated into the software, and it was called AutoCAD 97. This version was considered the best
