Crates:-

A "crate" is a set of monster/Tracks/Scapes that are available for sharing. The payer of a crate gets to use the whole crate contents including all "children".

The game loots crates from time to time for a variety of reasons including at least one Saver Crate and a Goblin Labor Crate.

Serious crates will always pay more than common or consumable ones although there are always exceptions to the rule.

Saver crates are meant to preserve the creatures you have already got at the cost of its weight. Its usefulness is on the higher end if you have enough space to carry it. This can be especially useful for a player with limited space who wants to focus on acquiring new creatures over expanding old ones.

Goblin Labor crates are left by the goblins you save via the Goblin Diplomacy. The creatures will be allowed to chew up the supplies you saved.

Creatures from Crates are always available in the Common or Lesser Quality you save them in. No need to store them more carefully if you save a common one or a good one, great creatures can be used in any scenario.

Crates are consumed when they hit the discard threshold. This value is dynamically adjusted based on the types of creatures and items you have at that moment. It is recomputed every time you save a creature or a crate.

Ildursa Lookout Tower

Whenever a creature is killed from a level 2 or higher wall, the level's scrolls, chests, loot chests or chests (whichever were used to kill the creature go into the level's Library at the bottom row.
