Bajaj: Director not getting enough paid work Music Director Sivakami Narasimha Rao may have lost his box office charm but he's not giving up working in films, says industry stalwart Bollywood movie distributor B.R. Bajaj. The distributor has plans to start his own movie production house and is likely to call on Rao to compose music for upcoming films. "I don't think he is getting enough work," Bajaj told IANS. "I will talk to him and bring my prospective projects to him," he said. "Sivakami is a great composer and we will call on him whenever we have films in mind. We have a filmmaker coming in and he will bring in the film." Bajaj said he would not be able to pay as much as music directors like Shankar-Ehsaan-Loy but would be more than pleased with the quality of music. "We have seen the output of music directors in Bollywood and if you compare them with those paid music directors in the south, the output is similar. Some of them are more expensive, but they are not as costly as you think. We will be happy with the music," he said. Bajaj said that a good composer can get a song ready in a day and even a bad composer can get a song ready in three days. "The price of a song will vary
