RED STONE DESIGN "The first time I played a game called Shining Force and I gave up on it because I couldn't figure out what I was supposed to do. I played it again and tried various things in front of the computer screen, and when I thought I had it all figured out, the game ended. But that shouldn't have happened. You see, when you face a new challenge and you don't know what you're supposed to do, you should take the time to figure it out. That's what this game is all about. It's about exploring new challenges and trying things until you figure them out. There's also a tutorial mode that runs you through the basics step by step." - A review by Disk2 (RED STONE DESIGN) AUDIOGRAPHY "When I play Shining Force, I don't need to have all the answers. ARE YOU READY FOR A NEW FANTASY ACTION RPG?

Fri, 19 Oct 2013 19:18:42 +0000 we are with more of my moddings and fixes, too many for just one entry. We are continuing with Skitch, and two things were fixed. First, the Multikill delay was reverted to 100% and the second that if a player used a firemage spell on another player, like Frost Nova, that they would catch fire as well. Now, for the Skitch thing. Most of you probably know by now that I prefer to do modding in a clean cut, no patch mod modding type of thing. You throw some code into your modding directory, add the new files to the game, patch, test, share. That's why I never kept that directory. Well, there is a reason, it's that I actually want the patch to hold as much of what the original mod was as possible, without me keeping patches going back and forth with myself, where some annoyance gets fixed, then two days later the patch breaks something (older patch not caused by a core mod). With that idea in mind, what I did back then, was to start a separate file with some data that was lost on the old mod, another with some new data with additions from other mods, some more data and then just send it to the game and throw the code and the data file and start patching. I'm not completely happy with this, it's not because I don't do it that way, quite the contrary, but I'm scared of overwriting something that needed to be there but is getting overwritten. But since the old Skitch mod deleted the skill - - skillmap, and I have no idea where the value was stored. So, not having the code in hand, I had to revert

Q: What is the generated class-name when creating an Employee using Gson and Retrofit2? I was writing a piece of code to generate an Employee object with fields id and name using Gson and Retrofit2, I am using the answer from this question as a reference: How to Create a new Gson JsonObject using Retrofit?, but my question is: What is the class-name generated in this code? `public class Employee { private int id; private String name; public Employee(int id, String name) { this.id = id; this.name = name; } public int getId() { return id; } public String getName() { return name; } @Override public String toString() { return "Employee{" + "id=" + id + ", name=" + name + "'"; } }` The code I wrote: `Gson gson = new Gson(); Employee emp = gson.fromJson(responce.getBody(), Employee.class);` A: `public class Employee { private int id; private String name; public Employee(int id, String name) { this.id = id; this.name = name; } public int getId() { return id; } public String getName() { return name; } @Override public String toString() { return "Employ`
