Reconstruction of the anterior cruciate ligament of the knee by free tendon transplantation using a novel tensile-stress-absorbing sleeve. A new method for reconstruction of the anterior cruciate ligament of the knee by the use of a novel tendon-sleeve device in a canine model was tested in 10 dogs. The experimental model consisted of an in vitro arthrotomy followed by an anterior drawer test of the knee. Five hundred consecutive canine knees had their anterior cruciate ligament either left intact or replaced with a tendon-sleeve device. The initial follow-up consisted of clinical examination and radiographic analysis. The follow-up period for the five dogs that survived varied from 1 to 16 months. There was no difference in laxity as measured by the anterior drawer test in the five surviving dogs. Light microscopy of the surgical and nonsurgical ends of the tendon sleeves showed essentially the same histology. The clinical evaluation in the five dogs that survived showed no sign of altered clinical behavior of the knee, ligament stability, or translation. The use of a tensile-stress-absorbing sleeve in a canine model of reconstruction of the anterior cruciate ligament of the knee showed no gross behavior changes in the new ligament that translated into any altered laxity or altered clinical behavior. Shaun White has been coming to shows to support his friends in front of him at various games in various locations. A few days ago he came to Austin to check out the new venue for the 2019 X Games. White stopped by a popular local food trucks known as Antix, yummy donuts/pizza/salad makers at Antix. The Austin Parks and Recreation department have been giving their volunteers a chance to see how they work so they can bring the community with them. There's a new article out over at Volun-Teach.org, that looks at the way that Parks and Recreation facilities can be used to help people. Austinites are supportive of local kids and their need for youth sports. Youth sports is something that's developed here in Austin over the years. The Austin Parks and Recreation department puts on several different programs for kids in different sports. You can see how much support local youth have for their sports here at Parks and Recreation. The Austin Parks and Recreation department have released a new video for those looking to learn more about the city's youth. This is their youth development video that covers what they do and how they work to get

kids active
