What's New in the GNews - Google News Reader?

Quickly consume the latest news from your favorite publications. Manual configuration might be a pain sometimes, but you can make the process easier by creating your own custom RSS feed generator and feed reader. This is very similar to the way GNews – Google News Reader does it, but with some interesting extra options. Setting up your own RSS feed generator When you get to work, start by creating a new project in Visual Studio. You can do this using the "New Project" template under Visual Basic and use the "Web" node as the selection criteria. You'll be able to select from a wide range of options, and you can browse through them by using the handy "Project Properties" window. Once you select the options you want, make sure you check the "Create a web application" checkbox at the top of the dialog. If you instead want to create a desktop app, you'll need to make sure to check the "Create a Windows Store app" box instead. The next thing you need to do is to connect to an RSS feed, as creating them manually is a pain, especially when you want to get them delivered automatically. You'll need to do that by installing one of the RSS feed readers included in Visual Studio. I've personally used Evernote for the purpose, and it works great if you like to have notes and memories in a cloud-based platform. It's well-featured, and you can access your data from any web browser, even those from Windows and iOS. If you're worried about leaving your passwords or other sensitive information unprotected, you can use the "Create an account" option, which basically creates an account only once in the app itself. Then, you don't have to worry about exposing the information to the public. While creating the app, select the "Web", "ASP.NET" and "Windows 8.1 Universal" nodes (if you want to target Windows 10 instead of Windows 8.1) for the deployment type. You'll also be asked to provide the app's URL, so you can get to it from any browser. Once you have everything set up, you'll be able to start working on the app, something that's similar to the way you would work with Microsoft's Bing Vision API. When you start working, you'll have to open up Visual Studio and select the "RSSFeedGenerator" project. This is the name of the project we created earlier. Once you select it
