SP500-PC Support to run core Windows drivers is to.Q: How to bring private XML-RPC interface? What's the easiest way to bring new XML-RPC interface available in my web application to the client computer without changing the module API? A: You can use a ctor in web.py to bring in private functions: import web @web.handler(private=True) class MyHandler(web.RequestHandler): def test_function(): # return string Note that you can't use private=True in a ctor in a module, because ctors from a module can't execute there. Another option is to create a new module that provides your custom functions, and then import that module where you need it: from module import MyHandler @web.handler def MyHandler(request): # use the web.RequestHandler methods ... The above is simpler and much nicer. Rob Balu will not be on the ballot in the next state election. The longtime Conservative Party organizer, who ran Rob Ford's now-defunct mayoral campaign and helped engineer the party's 2011 victory, was effectively axed in the aftermath of the Ontario election. Brought in by former leader Jim Flaherty, Balu's job was to handle the party's next election, to be held in 2018. And on Tuesday, Balu confirmed it will not be he, but rather Ontario party president Richard Ciano, who will be in charge. Balu had been campaigning to step in after revelations about Ford's drug-filled Toronto-area residence and the ensuing scandal that ultimately led to the embattled mayor's removal from office. He was seen as the natural choice to put the party back in the money after a fundraising dry spell. In recent weeks, Balu's relationship with the provincial party had deteriorated. He was publicly rebuffed during the leadership campaign, and the Ontario PCs were slow to provide him with the research and strategy to help make the case for Ford over alleged Mayor Rob Ford. 0cc13bf012
