Experience the thrill of flying in the city of Chicago. Chicago Airports, the developers of Aerofly FS 2, have focused on providing an immersive experience by recreating the Meigs Field terminal with more detailed texturing, greater sky depth, and three times the number of animated trees than in the original. The original Meigs Field terminal is now included within the game as a first-person view mini-game. The original terminal model includes a runway, taxiway, ramp, terminal building, and apron as well as a passenger waiting area and baggage claim. A modernization effort from the past twelve years has expanded the terminal to include additional parking areas and an expanded terminal building. The virtual airport has been recreated in full photorealism by integrating photoreal texturing, photoreal sky and ground textures, and a detailed environment including rolling clouds, animated people, ferris wheel, and many other details to discover. The terminal's environment is recreated with an expansive waterfront, tree cover and docks. A fully animated people and ferris wheel are included within the game. Part of the city of Chicago (Chicago Waterfront) is included. 16,000km<sup>2</sup> of photoreal coverage. AI aircraft are included. 3.8m image resolution. 3d workspaces containing 10 seats available for personal use. 6 passenger aircrafts. 3 Passenger FBOs (with building, loading areas, fueling, customer areas, and aprons). Powered by Unreal Engine 3.2.1. About Aerofly FS 2. Aerofly FS 2 is a free, easy to use FSX compatible app. Add airports and runways and fly! In this project, I find an old solution which that declares a CSS selector as below: .text:not(.title) { background-color: #FFFFFF; } .middle span { font-size: 3em; } .explanation:not(.title) { /* This only works when we use this */ } .explanation { position: fixed; z-index: 1000; top: 30%; height: 96%; width: 96%; font-size: 3em; background-color: #878787; display: none; } .explanation span { position: relative; font-size: 0.5em; } .explanation:hover { display: block; } .explanation
