Community Kalypso Media will be hosting a presentation and panel discussion tomorrow at 2 p.m. at the Game Developers Conference. Titled "Evolving a World, From Script to Level," the presentation is led by this year's Kalypso Game Jam winner, Andrew Leman. If you have a thing for retro games, or just want to learn about game jams, you'll be sure to get your fill. It's that time of year again! That time when we all put on our best looking Christmas sweaters, put on our best-looking, most appropriate jewelry, and sing about not being in the place we really want to be. Of course, there's a reason for all of this. This time of year is all about celebrating with your friends and family, trying to find a way to make everyone's lives better, and enjoying the simple things that make you happy. But what about that guy who sits in front of you in a church or mosque on Christmas Eve, and doesn't want to celebrate because it's not the right time? He's getting angry that his "righteous" friends are enjoying themselves and celebrating, while he's spending his day "preaching" to people who don't even want to hear it. He's upset because he knows it's the right thing to do, and it's not really the right time for it. Maybe the reason why some people feel they can't participate is because they're afraid. What if they're not seen as good? What if they're seen as the "bad guy"? What if they're the minority? You see, our world is very structured. We have very clear rules, and very clear paths for everything. But this is the holiday season, and we are all supposed to be together. Is this a good thing? Do we need to have clear guidelines for how we live our lives, and who can get on board? I think we do. To avoid being the "bad guy" for someone else, you need to be able to understand why they don't want to participate. Then, you need to figure out why they don't want to participate. Usually, there are four kinds of answers to these questions. You can "attack" them; you can make them feel bad for not doing it; you can give them an opportunity to do it later; and you can learn to live with it. In the last section, I talk about the fourth option; I talk is coming along nicely, and it should be a very good expansion. I wanted to share with you some of what we have been working on, and some of the things we have in the works for release in Legion. Cataclysm was a game that, when it came out, was considered by many to be a failure. It established the modern WoW franchise, but also established those core design philosophies that have been molded, tarted up or simply broken in every expansion that followed it in the lineage. Those core design philosophies include the removal of features for convenience or to reward you for playing. Some of the things we've added back in numerous expansions, like flying mounts and mounts again, were things that players felt were priorities at the time and should be restored. Beyond Legion we have a lot of planned content, including the dungeon, Demon Soul, the new Legion mythic dungeon, and new end game raid dungeons. But we're just getting started. We're not done, and we've got a lot of plans to put content into Legion after launch. With that said, I would be remiss if I didn't share with you a new program we have in the works that looks to take a lot of the resources we're using to support 8M players and instead put it into adding new content. How does that work? Let me explain As of today, our two most popular WoW expansions are Cataclysm and Legion. While we've continued to add content in the real time in the past, our content has basically been planned for Cataclysm and Legion at this point. We've got a lot more work on various expansions now, but those expansions and their planned content are largely locked in. In order for us to best maintain and grow the game long-term, we have dedicated dedicated to preparing, delivering and maintaining new content while still keeping Cataclysm and Legion fresh. This infrastructure allows us to react to the ever increasing size of our player base. Unfortunately, our two most popular expansions also mean that our infrastructure cannot support us servicing current content. We have been servicing Cataclysm as best we can for some time now, but in order to add more players and content, we have been running infrastructure meant to support more players than we have now. When Cataclysm launched, we had a well-publicized bug that was cruelly named Brain Freeze—but there is much more to it than that. By the

The Earth is a land filled with diversity. From mountains and valleys to oceans and tundras, a careful balance exists in each of its parts. However, a new threat has descended upon the Earth. Enemies called the Invaders from the planet Mudora has invaded our world. Taking advantage of the strategic advantages of its square land, the Invaders have taken over its people. As the Commander of the EDF in what was once a square Earth, you will fight back! (©Sega)21\]. It is thus possible that radiation or other forms of stress, such as food or behavior deficiencies, that animals experience could alter the manifestation of social behavior, and therefore, as such, affect social behavior, but without affecting the NSB of individuals. The three behavioral variables we tested (Figure 1{ref-type="fig"}) were selected because they may also be influenced by social interactions or stressors, and they are thus biologically relevant with regard to investigating mechanisms through which social interactions may impact parental care. On an evolutionary level, this study also highlighted another potentially important factor in the evolution of NSB. The examination of the NSB of individual mice provides a more complete picture of parental care, since both sexes must be considered. Another important consideration is that the previous research done in this field was carried out using far less scientific research methods, and additionally, used mice bred for commercial purposes which could affect the results. For example, normal commercial mouse breeding practices begin when the mice are about one week old, and the offspring that survive the first few weeks are typically used for other commercial purposes ([@b23-br-0-0-1175]). This research method means that the mice are selected due to their commercial value rather than their health status and may be more likely to have a phenotype related to health and survival, as opposed to the stress and phenotype of normal wild-type mice ([@b30-br-0-0-1175]). Another important consideration is that the behavior of animals bred for commercial purposes, such as mice, are often selected for effects other than NSB, including appearance, and this may affect the results obtained ([@b34-br-0-0-1175]). One major limitation of this study was that only male pups were used in this study. The NSB of females is important to consider, and future studies that examine NSB should therefore include females. Additionally, the visual feature used
