Insulin resistance precedes hyperinsulinaemia in adults and is mainly attributable to reduction of HDL-cholesterol. The present study investigated whether the relation between insulin resistance and glucose intolerance occurs before the onset of hyperinsulinaemia in a large Chinese population. A total of 1,735 Chinese adults, free of diabetes, impaired glucose tolerance, impaired fasting glucose, cardiovascular disease, cancer and chronic inflammatory diseases, were included in the study. Homeostasis model assessment of insulin resistance (HOMA-IR) was used to assess insulin resistance, and the oral glucose tolerance test (OGTT) was used to assess both insulin sensitivity and glucose tolerance. After dividing the participants into 3 groups according to their HOMA-IR and OGTT, the incidences of both hyperinsulinaemia and glucose intolerance increased with increasing levels of HOMA-IR, and the cumulative incidence of both increased more rapidly in participants with higher HOMA-IR and with impaired glucose tolerance. The relative risk for hyperinsulinaemia was increased by 3.93 in participants with high HOMA-IR (OR = 3.93, 95% CI: 2.84-5.45). The prevalence of hyperinsulinaemia was higher in participants with low HDL-cholesterol than that in participants with high HDL-cholesterol (P 852 F.2d 567 Unpublished Disposition)

If you use a Mac, you can use the "Copy" command in the menu bar to copy a window to the clipboard. If you are talking about the "Copy" command from within a program, such as a web browser, then the Menu will have an "Edit" menu with an "Undo" option - this command does exactly what you are saying. If you right click on it or hold down the mouse and click and hold, you will see a menu of sorts appear with options. If you select "Copy" it will copy the current selections to the clipboard, and I believe if you do a right click on it it will prompt you for where you want to paste it (but it will default to your desktop). Thank you. I have tried: if I try to save a.PNG file, there is an error dialog. I don't know about the "copy" command from within the browser. I will try the right-click feature and check if there is an "edit" menu. Thanks for your answer.
