I am trying to develop a mobile app for the Samsung Gear Fit and Samsung Gear 2 smart watches with Tizen SDK. I noticed that on my desktop (OSX El Capitan), I can compile and run my app in 20 seconds. It works like a charm! But on the Samsung Gear Fit and Gear 2, which use Tizen 3.0, it takes 30 seconds to run! (also, building the app takes 45 seconds!) I have analyzed how much time it takes for my app to start, and I have found that my app takes a lot of time to start up, and the main code is about 4 seconds. I have also seen that if I remove all the code related to the interface, then the app is running much faster (also, I have seen some code related to sensors). The weirdest thing that I have noticed so far is that this is not the case with Android SDK (also, the IOS dev kit is really slow!), for example, if I modify the code to take 5 minutes to run, then it takes about one minute on Android and about 2 seconds on the Samsung Gear! What could be the possible reason for such a difference between Tizen and Android (and IOS)? Some info: - Samsung Gear Fit has a CPU of Qualcomm MSM7F30T2 with 1.2 GHz Processor - Samsung Gear 2 has a CPU of Qualcomm MSM8F30FIT A: I made a few tests on my Tizen SDK-based

Samsung Gear 2, and found that this is caused by poor API level. The Gear Fit has an API level of 7, and the Gear 2 has an API level of 9. The apps with the same code that I've done on Android (8.0) 595f342e71
