A user in chat said something so I added some lines to the chat standard script. But is this safe? For example, this situation a user in chat asks him a question another user answers the question directly The question will be mixed with another user's answer? Is there a risk that it will be displayed on one's own page? A: I'm not sure if such a thing would be possible, but on the other hand, we do not have mechanisms to ensure people do not display things belonging to other users. If

?? Must hear this recording: A: You're downloading the RAR file for the wrong program. You're looking for the full version of Optic Studio. They don't make a cracked version for that program. Instead, they make a cracked version of Zemax Softimage 2014. If you're not using that program, then you want to simply download the torrent file for the full version of that program. If you are using Softimage 2014, you can download the full version from Q: Dalton and Jackson and Spring's Jackson-databind integration As part of my quest to understand Jackson's Jackson-databind integration within Spring, I did read the following article (and other articles on the same subject): But for the life of me I can't figure out what really happened. Like I say, I have read the articles and I have understood the concepts of the article but not exactly how they are being applied. So here goes: Please forgive any amateurish mistakes as I am totally new to Spring and the Jackson-databind integration. I have a class which looks like this: public class JsonRequest { public String text; public String getText() { return text; } public void setText(String text) { this.text = text; } public JsonRequest() { } } I have configured a custom Jackson provider in my spring context file. That part works ok. com.test.domain.JsonRequest
