Eloy Jiménez and the potential for a massive April promotion to Double-A. The Red Sox's plan to make a statement at the deadline, and their ultimate decision to trade Hanley Ramirez and others, is paying off. After facing Oakland in Game 4, the Sox swept the A's in the series and will be going to the Bronx for a winner-take-all Game 5 on Thursday. And they took out the Red Sox media contingent, which is interesting, given that they haven't won a playoff game at Fenway since 2013. And Jiménez is now the prime candidate to be promoted from Triple-A to the majors at some point this season, via Dan Shaughnessy of The Athletic: Jiménez has been on a tear at Pawtucket in recent weeks and he now leads the International League in homers, RBIs and OBP, and he's 11th in slugging. In the playoff, he crushed three homers and added four RBIs, a triple, a walk and a stolen base. He just put up a .341/.461/.719 line in 30 games. Jiménez is absolutely one of the best prospects in baseball, and he's now on a mission to show that he can play at the big-league level. The Red Sox have fallen into a bit of a rebuild. It could be argued that there's not really a plan right now. This was supposed to be the time to develop prospects, but that plan has shifted. The Sox were counting on top prospect Andrew Benintendi to come up at some point this year, and he hasn't
