A museum in Japan has carved itself a niche by taking on 'supernatural' cases, with the latest incident involving the deaths of a pregnant woman and her two-year-old daughter, both of whom are assumed to have been killed by a supernatural force. The case happened near Setagaya in Tokyo, with emergency workers reported to be stunned to find the bodies of a 24-year-old woman, pregnant with her third child, and her two-year-old daughter inside the car. Police report finding two glass bottles, an ornamental screw, and a charm among other items on the ground near the car. According to the BBC, there are reports that the woman had been trying to reverse her car while attempting to escape from two other people believed to be trying to abduct her. Police now believe that the incident is connected with "a demon." The Japan Times is reporting that investigators discovered "a scattering of glass and a purse" and one of the bottles had broken, which suggests the incident was the result of something other than the car hitting a pothole or tree. "There is a phenomenon that in cases where such incidents occur, there's usually a pattern of communication between the mother and child, and regarding whether it's favorable or not," Tetsuo Masuyama, spokesman for Tokyo Metropolitan Police Department, said, according to the Japan Times. "Also, after the incident the baby cries out 'Mama' a few times." Read more [The Emergency Election Sale is now live!
