Vectronom is a rhythm game where you pilot a flying machine (ship) in a futuristic world. Find the best place to stop to make scores of points. Avoid colliding with other ships, collect the most power-ups and avoid spinning into a wall. Features: • 100 unique tracks with different styles of music • 3 unique ships with unique abilities • 20 unique power-ups • Full game controller support We will be adding new features over time to make the game more enjoyable. About This Game: WorldSense is a one-screen arcade game made with Unity3D. The game features original ambient electronica music made by me, coupled with a beautiful 2D art style. The game begins as you select a new character from a pre-defined pool of characters. Then you take on a 100-point journey around the screen. To keep your character alive you need to ensure you don't destroy anything while also collecting all the power-ups. The power-ups come in 4 different types. The nature of the game means you might make a mistake and destroy your spaceship. If this happens you either start all over again or you have a chance to 'die and keep playing'. The game is coming with a free level editor. So if you're a programmer you can create new courses and share them with others. About This Game: Greenfield is a beautiful two-dimensional single player game featuring 100 completely original 2.5D point-and-click puzzles and sonic music with a jungle theme. In Greenfield you play a rabbit-like creature. Each puzzle involves finding something hidden in one of two 2D screens. The game features 25 full puzzles and 7 remixes by different artists from around the world. About This Game: Welcome to the world of Liftbridge! Unfortunately, there is only one survivor of the extinction of the Earthling race that inhabited this planet. Unfortunately, the creature has also stolen the lift bridge from the surviving city. Play the mysterious side-scrolling jump and run game. You must make your way through each level and collect the key, before you can unlock the lift bridge and escape the doomed city. About This Game: Batterup lets you play as a robot battling giant alien spiders for the last drop of oil from a destroyed world. The game consists of 70 levels, each with its own unique challenge. Every level has 3 kinds of enemies

The main objective of the game is to help the time cat collect all the sparks before they run out! There are five main parts that the cat will have to complete in order to advance to the next stage :

- Fusion : the cat has to mix the different sounds to hear that a spark is close.

- Balance : the cat has to tilt the device and match it with the background of the game
 - Relax : the cat has to slow the time down and notice all the mini moments of the song
 - Memory : the cat has to write down the musical notes he hears, sound or image.
 - Science : the cat has to notice the following :
 - When the star explodes, a silvery trail will drift across the sky. Only you can hear this otherwise your ears would make a "clap noise", you only hear it in the game
 - Often the music will get softer towards

Creative Commons — Attribution4.0International — CC BY 4.0 Song: "Elephant - AnimalSpoon" Music provided by Ascio. The elephant-the elephant Is the most majestic animal in the world. With its long, thin trunk and almost human-looking face, the elephant epitomises power and majesty. For scale, walk a step behind a mature bull elephant, and it's easy to see how big it is to be producing power that could topple a normal-sized timber. Like other land animals, elephants are making a comeback, and their population is estimated to be in the hundreds of thousands against millions back in the 1950s. Now the people of Indonesia have their first herd of baby elephants. Their population is estimated to be in the hundreds of thousands against millions back in

What's new in Time Tails:

(Aardman Animations) Time Tails is a 1986 animated stop motion film directed by Nick Park and produced by Aardman Animations. The story follows two mice who accidentally set a course for prehistoric times, where they meet an armadillo, an ant and a woolly rhinoceros who are the last survivors of the late Pleistocene. The filmmakers used unconventional plot elements, including animals telling human stories and using the English language, typical of Mr. Park's later work. Time Tails was in production for seven years. Aardman started planning it immediately after the success of A Day in the Life (1983), but faced severe restrictions to work on this project as they could not legally release the film until six months after the United Kingdom broadcast of The Great Train Robbery in March 1985. After the release of the film, Aardman Film continued production on A Close Shave (1988) and Wallace & Gromit (1988). Plot 12-year-old Timmy McMom is unwell and has a headache. His mother lets him watch the BBC programme The Biggest Bit of All about the largest prehistoric creature, the Arctic woolly mammoth. Timmy is intrigued and runs to the kitchen to watch more. Shortly afterwards, he vomits, and during a police raid to find the missing presenter, the police find him unconscious and take him away. A few days later, Timmy wakes up and, when his mother asks how he feels, explains that he has not seen the television. The police officer, who also uses the surname Unger, appears and explains that he has been called on to investigate the disappearance of a prominent broadcaster, Bernard Bishop. The officer gives Timmy a television, he watches the Biggest Bit of All while Timmy eats his treacle toad. On the television, a male and female elephant are discovered in a natural history museum and are brought inside. The man collapses and is helped into a helicopter by the female elephant. The male elephant watches the helicopter as it leaves. Meanwhile, Bernard Bishop wakes up. He notices that he has no pants on, and remarks that the last time he had a shirt on was when he was a famous, elderly dinosaur, and that none of his neighbors, not even the one with a shell, has noticed. He notices that he has wet himself and apologizes. He is upset when he realizes that his company is in trouble because he still has not made a new TV commercial.
