Screenshot Gallery User Reviews "All the DLC's I've ever bought have had this package in the files/directories, only the Sims 3 plugins I've ever bought did not! (Mind you that I didn't have a Sim Points back then)I don't really know if I'd get this one if the 10,000 Sim Points wasn't up for grabs as an Easter Egg. But for $1 it's way too good to pass up on.It's fun but would definitely recommend to those who enjoy the sexiness of the Sims, although it's definitely a "very mature" DLC." 68% October 4, 2014 Here is my review:I bought this because it's awesome for a dark setting, or because of the "renown" aspect, which I enjoy the most about this game. I bought it on Monday and it's already going down, the Sims 4 has the most drama. LOL! My original Sim does not like the nurses, so I had to feed her to get rid of her. How stupid!Oh well, now my Sim is their friend, but she doesn't want to be any of them. However, my Sim is an FBI agent and she has chosen to be a police officer now. I actually enjoy this aspect, but I do want to be a nurse. What's new in Them And Us - Service Costume Pack:

Mouse over image to zoom Product Information Split into Three Parts. Field The Scorpion (5+ players, 10-30 min) The game begins with both sides making their goals and sentries marked off by a perimeter like in Civilization. The first player in a goal gets to serve (an achievement will be awarded to the first player to serve all of their opponents). The player on the other side serves back. Players win by either having all of their goals marked (or killing all opponents' defenders) or by having more goals. Ends in a draw (nobody wins) if no player is serving. Game play structure is similar to Advanced Civilization, but instead of cities, players utilize defensive walls, fortresses, and other tools to block in their opponents. Service: Players take turns laying down a defensive layer of their choice. Team Fortress 2 weapons are treated as siege weapons, so shotguns can be fired over walls to clear, for example. Players must maneuver though a Pathfinder Ability to play any provided answer. The ability can be answered any time except when in use (the wall still exists though). There is a limit of one defensive wall per player in the game, but players can construct wall counters, both with footholds and without. You might be able to throw a shotgun at a wall, and the wall might deflect its energy away, but you can't shoot a shotgun at the wall while it still exists. You only get one attempt at each defensive wall. It doesn't matter what your answer is or what your opponent says in reply. In true StarCraft/StarCraft II fashion, the defense matters the most. If you fail you don't get a free shot, the opponent picks up the reward. Walls can be easily destroyed by a wide variety of methods - Shotguns/Hostal turrets/weapons, Ares, BFG9000 etc. Three opposing walls can be constructed, two teams provide two different abilities to choose from. Service game flow and structure are based on Advanced Civilization, but aspects are simplified to fit for a more action-based strategy game. Service layout is in the form of a 'checkpoint jungle' with defensive walls' standardized checkpoints. In the center is a central City hub where most of the information, currency, services and construction are. Players have a universal set of currencies, Skills and Ability cards available to them. No Resources exist, Economy
