Download .The venerable anti-Bitcoin activist Craig Wright has been involved in a very peculiar cryptocurrency scam in the past, and he also claims to have purchased around ten Bitcoin (BTC) at the genesis block. Wright Accuses the BTC Foundation of "Fraud" The controversial figure also claimed that the founder of the Bitcoin Foundation, Peter Vessenes, had made the "most egregious call for fraud" in the history of cryptocurrency. Wright said the following about the Bitcoin Foundation, during a discussion about the "Auctioned BTC" event on Reddit: "Peter Vessenes, the founder of the Bitcoin Foundation, had this most egregious call for fraud in the history of cryptocurrency. He started a draft petition for "Hash Redistribution" to slow down the mining of BTC. He wrote "This petition is to present a sense of urgency about hash redistribution to the community." I think he was merely attempting to attempt to salvage his own reputation for this fraudulent behavior, but it shows just how disingenuous the Bitcoin Foundation has been. He tried to go back on his word and change the subject at the last minute." Wright also accused some of the best-known Bitcoin-oriented Twitter personalities of "collusion" for the purpose of bringing him down. Among those, Wright mentioned Twitter users "Barbara Smith," "Matt Odell," and "Zane Mejia," adding that they were "all mutual owners of MGT Capital Investments." He further claimed that such individuals had approached him on Twitter, promising to "get rid of all the bad press" in exchange for "significant BTC," but he stated that such offers were made only in order to "set me up for [a] lightning raid." Wright also confirmed that he had purchased some BTC at the genesis block, although he did not specify how much. According to the figure, such an act is "[w]orth no more than $100,000 USD right now." Wright also spoke about the recent "Auctioned BTC"
