BEFORE YOU LEAVE THE ROOM, PLEASE ENSURE THAT YOU ARE A VIRGIN (or close enough so that it won't be a problem).

If there is no problem with virginity, please remember to wear comfortable underwear to play the game. All women, please wear the official safety panties during the game. Your panties are also used in your game character screen. The same goes for men. If you don't want to use them, we'll just turn off the protection to avoid needless discomfort. The threat is within, so please make sure that you are wearing nothing under your panties. By wearing your panties, you can increase your protection level. Using your panties as armor is a shared component by core members.

"An action RPG that will satisfy fans of the genre" - GAME REVIEWS "A really good game that keeps the genre alive" - MOEANABEANQ: Relation between mean weighted and mean impurity I'm trying to understand the difference between mean impurity and mean

weighted measure of impurity. I'm using R's computing the following values: TP = 250 TN = 795 FP = 125 FN = 29 Using the definition: Mean impurity = $\frac{\sum\{(tp+tn)\}}{|\{tp+tn\}|}$ Mean weighted misclassification = $\frac{\sum\{(tp+tn+fp+fn)\}}{|\{tp+tn+fp+fn\}|}$ I get: mean impurity: \$3.4\$ mean weighted misclassification: \$5.0\$ Could someone explain the relation between these two measures? I would expect a relation in the sense that increasing the mean impurity will always result in a decrease of the mean weighted impurity, and the relation is not linear. A: This is the relation between Mean Pure Distance and Mean Marginal Cost (using 'Mean Marginal Cost of classification' we get \$3.43\$): As you can see, the relation is linear. For 'Mean Marginal Cost of classification' we have: $\sum_{x \in X} d(x,y) = \sum_{x \in X} \sum_{x' \in Y} \text{I}\{x = x'\} d(x,y)$ which is the same as: $\sum_{x \in X} \sum_{x' \in X \cup Y} \text{I}\{x = x'\} d(x,y)$ which is the same as: $\sum_{x \in X} \sum_{x' \in X \cup Y} \frac{d(x,y)}{d(x,x')}$ So if the ratio $\frac{d(x,y)}{d(x,x')}$
