See for the specification and for a complete example. The default setting is not to use an XML parser (validate against a string-based schema) but you can use the basicValidator parameter to turn that on. Q: I am looking for a way to send messages/automatically answer questions to a windows computer I have been searching google and stackoverflow and tried to find something I am looking for but i can not find something that works. I would like to send messages/automatically answer questions from a desktop or laptop windows computer. To be more specific, it is some kind of ebook reader(kindle) connected to a windows desktop or laptop computer I would like to send messages with a special code/symbols. Like an autoresponder that automatically answers questions and sends responses to the sender(me). Does anyone have an idea or point me into the right direction? Thank you very much A: That's a pretty specific question. You probably need something like the solr server to run in your development environment. The solr server can be configured to send you messages whenever it is done searching for a certain file. If you want to keep a certain knowledge base, you could use solr for that too. Alternatively you could use an open source service with a web interface like Google Apps. This allows you to create one time passwords etc. (CNN) -- Pennsylvania's secretary of state has sent a letter to prosecutors in the case of former Washington governor Gary Locke because of an apparent conflict of interest that would deny a defendant a fair trial, the man's attorney says. Former Washington Gov. Gary Locke was sentenced to 90 days in jail on July 2. The letter from Jack R. Green Jr. of the office of the governor says Locke's constitutional rights have been violated and should
