It's a program I only have to turn to for one reason: breaking sentences and paragraphs. I know just how well Word can handle a "broken" sentence. How the hell can I avoid it? Ending Sentences Without an apostrophe Making a topic sentence Making a transitional sentence The answer: Use the "Smart" Editing feature and for the major punctuation issues that it can fix for you. I personally use the Find & Replace feature in Word. But you could also use the Advanced Find and Replace, as it comes up when you type "Find" in the Find & Replace drop-down box. The "smart" feature can cut down on the mark-up issues that end up ruining an entire paragraph. But I'm not talking about that now. This time I'm talking about sentences. It takes a bit of patience, but if you're able to get over the "wet ink" part of the brain, you can learn how to make changes to your writing within seconds. For now, just keep in mind that if you make a mistake in sentence construction, a single misplaced quote can ruin an entire paragraph. So how do you avoid that? A few simple techniques will end your problems in moments:

Making a topic sentence Topic sentences are essential to paragraphs, but not all paragraphs have topic sentences. Before you can write a topic sentence, you have to get down to the basics. Your topic sentence will be clear and concise -- strong and clear. It will set up the rest of your paragraph to follow suit. So the one secret to writing a good topic sentence is to figure out what kind of information you have to convey. If you know the topic already, just take a moment to write it down. The following examples should help you identify the subject of your topic sentence. Then you can write a few sentences that show the reader what kind of thing you are talking about. As an example, I used the names "Frost," "Ice," and "Snow" above as topic sentences. Making a transitional sentence Once you know what your topic is, the next trick is to stick bipolar disorder. Participants were 29 children/adolescents with bipolar disorder (ICD-10-Dx; age  $M = 14.17$ , range = 5-20), recruited from an outpatient clinic, and 28 typically developing children. The Childhood Psychopathology Interview (CPI), the Children's Depression Inventory (CDI), the Children's Global Assessment Scale (CGAS), the parents' completed Child Behavior Checklist (CBCL), and measures of the family environment, work situation, and school were completed. Hierarchical regression analyses revealed that the CPI total problem score and sub-scales of Internalizing, Externalizing, and Thought Problems predicted CDI-Anxiety and Anger scores; CPI total problem score and the Internalizing Problem score predicted CGAS scores. CPI total problem score, and Internalizing and Thought Problems scores predicted CBCL scores. In addition, CPI Total Problem score and CPI Thought Problems predicted quality of peer relations; CPI Internalizing Score predicted school functioning. These findings suggest that psychosocial factors contribute to the severity and functioning in children with bipolar
