Urine Dari: Free Download.The number of jobs in Vancouver's tech sector grew by 8 percent in the year ending on March 31, the latest data from Statistics Canada shows, and the bureau has released additional data to offer more detail on the growth and growth trends across the sector. The number of employment in the tech sector grew by 8 percent in the year ending March 31, 2016, and the market grew by the same amount as well, up to a total of about 70,000. But the market experienced a big bounce-back year, up 10 percent over the year ended March 31, 2015. Between 2014 and 2015, the tech market, considered a low point for the economy, lost 6,000 jobs, and in the two years before that, it had lost 12,000 jobs. However, the year ending March 31 was the first in a while when the market grew by even half that amount, so it's still pretty weak. While the tech industry is small, it still makes up a considerable chunk of Vancouver's overall job base. On the one hand, small means it's a lot harder to track. On the other, we do get a sense of the size of the sector in the overall job picture. Global Tech Advisory, a research firm focusing on Vancouver's tech industry, has tracked the sector's overall size for many years, based on the growth of the market and the number of employees in the sector. With the latest data, we get an idea of the sector's size on any given day, since Global Tech measures the market as a whole. As of July 3, the sector was about 37,000 employees, roughly 2.6 percent of the overall labour force in Vancouver, including both regular jobs and part-time employment. (
