tomography. Many conditions are accompanied by the overactivity of central 5-HT<sub>2A</sub> receptors (5-HT<sub>2AR</sub>) and their blockade or agonism may be useful in therapy. However, in the current literature, there are only two radioligands available to characterize the 5-HT<sub>2AR</sub> in the living human brain. We designed a series of new (<sup>11</sup>C)-labeled ligands and evaluated their potential to visualize central 5-HT<sub>2AR</sub> using positron emission tomography (PET). Radioligand properties were evaluated in vitro, ex vivo, and in vivo in healthy volunteers. Some of the new radioligands were also evaluated in PET studies on depressed patients. Analyses of pharmacokinetics in the living human brain showed that all of the new radioligands have a high specific binding (i.e. 3-9 times more binding than [(<sup>11</sup>C)]M100907) and rapid and slow washout from the brain. The highest brain-to-plasma ratio was found for the novel radioligand (R)-(+)-2,5-dimethoxy-4-iodoamphetamine [(R)-MeODI]. The [(R)-MeODI] showed suitable binding properties in vitro and ex vivo for visualizing central 5-HT<sub>2AR</sub> in the living human brain (e.g. high brain-to-blood ratio, no metabolites in the brain). Additionally, [(R)-MeODI] showed relevant differences in the distribution volume (V(T)) between the brain and the periphery as well as a relatively specific distribution of binding sites in the living human brain. (11)C-(R)-MeODI clearly visualizes central 5-HT<sub>2A</sub>R in the living human brain and therefore offers the possibility of imaging these receptors for therapy in psychiatry.
