NetBuilder is a separate, stand-alone application that builds on the functionality of AutoCAD. It provides other CAD-related applications such as AutoCAD Web/Mobile, Autodesk BIM 360, AutoCAD Server Manager, and AutoCAD 360 Mobile. In addition, AutoCAD includes AutoCAD Web, a web-based application that allows users to view a database, along with associated CAD drawings, documents, and drawings. AutoCAD Web may be used to connect to an AutoCAD file, view CAD drawings online and save drawings as web pages. It is available as an extension of AutoCAD or can be used separately. AutoCAD also provides a wireless command protocol, the Autodesk Wi-Drive for AutoCAD (AWDC), for viewing, sharing, and drawing over a wireless network. In the AutoCAD 2016.4 release, the new Windows 8 Metro user interface was introduced, initially with the AutoCAD application only. Other applications, such as the Web App, have since been updated to use the new Metro design.

AutoCAD also supports three different file types, including AIG (AutoCAD Graphics File), DGN (AutoCAD Drawing), and DXF (AutoCAD Drawing Exchange Format). There are also two file formats available for CAD and BIM collaboration, DWG and DWF. With these formats, AutoCAD can create and collaborate on DWG and DWF files, while AutoCAD Architecture, AutoCAD Electrical and AutoCAD Civil 3D will import and export DWG files. Third-party applications AutoCAD's.NET and Visual LISP integration have enabled many third-party developers to build applications on top of AutoCAD. In the field of Civil engineering, various Civil 3D modules have been developed based on AutoCAD's C3D API.
