The semiconductor industry has experienced rapid growth due to continuous improvements in the integration density of a variety of electronic components (e.g., transistors, diodes, resistors, capacitors, etc.). For the most part, this improvement in integration density has come from repeated reductions in minimum feature size, which allows for the integration of more components into a given area. As semiconductor technology continues to evolve, chip sizes have grown to encompass increasing levels of wafer real estate. However, conventional techniques for fabricating integrated circuit structures based on multi-wafer stacking face problems and challenges in handling and conveying the increasingly massive amounts of data and signals that are processed, stored and/or transmitted in the course of fabricating an integrated circuit structure. Thus, there is a need for a new and improved integrated circuit structure and method of forming the same which is capable of handling and conveying data and signals associated with fabricating an integrated circuit structure.

When the coaches and players of the Oregon State women's soccer team returned from their championship trip to the NCAA women's soccer finals in April, there was an expectation that the Beavers would immediately move onto the 2009 Pac-10 Conference Championship. On Tuesday morning, Oregon State met that expectation with a 2-
