I use visual studio and front end web development so I'm very familiar with the use of stylesheets and code behind. I've build websites before that only had a fixed template because of this. Now I'm working on a project where I'm building a website that is based on many modules, and each module have its own interface, so I want to have the ability to change the look and feel of the page using just CSS without needing to edit the code behind. I'm thinking of using templates that can be used by each module. So if I want to change the font size I just insert the template. Is this a good way to go or is there a better method? A: It sounds like you want to use a base theme and then customize it via child themes. For example, use an application framework like Bootstrap and then customize its base theme for your purpose. Remember that all you need to do is to make changes to a style.css file which will then be shared between all child themes. Your website can have a fixed theme and then the child theme can be the theme which you want to customize. There are some great articles available on the internet and tutorials showing how to customize a base theme. Checkout the Mozilla Developer Network Page about Child Themes A: You can create a global css file, which will be loaded on every page. You can also create a base template for every module and create links to this template file. You can create many module templates and so you can avoid any issues. Cellular proliferation activity in the lamina propria of nasal polyp mucosa of patients with seasonal allergic rhinitis. This study investigated the proliferation activity of lamina propria lymphocytes in nasal polyps (NPs) and the significance of its involvement in seasonal allergic rhinitis (SAR). Tissue sections from polyps and unaffected nasal mucosa from NP patients with SAR or control subjects with no history of nasal allergy were stained by immunohistochemical methods using Ki-67 antibody and a proliferation index (PI) was determined. In general, cell proliferation in NPs was more active than in control nasal mucosa, and the PI was significantly higher in NPs than in control mucosa
