She had heard so much of the "marine", "the "rage of the seas"" etc, etc. She was not prepared for the sight of "the line", and how could the little sea hauler "take" her and her load over those towering cliffs, the coldness of the air would instantly kill her, and if she did get through with her load...The new Step 3 in the biology and prevention of recurrent urinary tract infections. A critical biologic process of the upper urinary tract is bacterial adhesion and colonization. There are several potential points at which the bacteria may first get in contact with the epithelium. In these points the classical aspects of innate immunity as well as various features of acquired immunity can be represented, but in many ways the reality does not fit such a schematic view. It is widely accepted that the normal microflora in the urinary tract is usually composed of a mixture of bacteria and not one specific bacterial species. The differentiation between commensal and pathogenic bacteria and the development of acquired immunity against urinary tract infections depend on subtle changes in the microflora rather than on the complete elimination of the organism as it has been commonly practiced. What is new is a new
