characterize a fucosylated oligosaccharide from human plasma. The oligosaccharides were released from glycoproteins with endo-beta-galactosidase A and characterized by high-voltage paper electrophoresis and chromatography. It was found that the isolated oligosaccharide, which has a fucose residue with some alpha 1----3 linkage to a N-acetylglucosamine and is unsubstituted at C-6 of the N-acetylglucosamine, should be assigned to the Fuc alpha 1----3GlcNAc beta 1----, which has not been previously recognized in human plasma glycoproteins. In addition, an alpha 1----6 linked fucose residue was found to be attached at the reducing terminus of some peptides of one plasma glycoprotein. It seems reasonable to assume that the fucosylated oligosaccharide found in the present study could be involved in the biosynthesis of the fucosylated oligosaccharides found in other mammalian tissues.
