AM noise of T-cell-mediated immune responses in the dog.
Since many studies to date have been performed in vitro in cell suspensions from normal animals, a study was performed in vivo in dogs to determine if or to what extent T-cell-mediated immune responses could be stimulated in vivo by pure tone signals. To this end, resting lymphocytes were sensitized in vivo in order to determine the potential of the impulse response of a pure tone signal to activate sensitized cells. Data from immune assays such as delayed-type hypersensitivity, the mixed lymphocyte culture, and blastogenesis in the presence of phytohemagglutinin (PHA) were compared to data from similar immune assays obtained following in vitro stimulation of lymphocytes with the tonal signal. In general, there was no difference between in vivo and in vitro data. However, it was found that if resting cells were sensitized prior to stimulation with the tonal signal, the initial increase of antigen-specific blastogenesis in vitro was higher than that seen in vivo, an effect thought to be due to an adjuvant effect associated with the tonal signal. melanoma cells. A novel N,N-bis(amidinoalkyl)amide, honey-1,6-bis(amidinopropyl)cyclohexan, was isolated from honey gland extract of the yellow fruits of Anastrepha fraterculus (Diptera: Tephritidae). The chemical structure of this compound was elucidated by spectroscopic data and by comparison with the published structure of the closely related compound, honey-1,6-bis(amidinoethyl)cyclohexan, from Anastrepha suspensa. Honey-1,6-
