Basically all official firmware updates are provided by the device manufacturer. If an update is available, you will usually be notified via a notification. Some devices, such as TVs that are already being updated, may request an update if you connect to your home Wi-Fi network. If you've recently bought a new Android phone or a new TV model, you'll have to find information on how to update them yourself. Unfortunately, you won't be able to do this if your new phone or TV is still using older Android devices or older Smart TV devices. You'll have to find a way to update them via the Wi

Both the iphone 4s and.Q: Feature Request: Better closing of questions by Editors The editing (and closing) of a question can be one of the most epic fights between moderators that I have ever had. The closed post is shown by default in the question list, but people sometimes have to find the question through search. While typing the title of the question in the search box, it's also shown in the search results so the user can use that search to find the question. Here is an example, copied from the search box: Is there a way to have the system suggest a more compact title on the post when you start typing it? For example, if I search for "where is", there is no way I can type "where is a b?". If I do it myself, I get the following (which is still very bad in my opinion): A: Although this is a nice idea, I'm against this as it introduces wrong feeling. To do that, we would need real text for this pattern. So, I suggest we move on with standard one. We can improve this one with community. Stable cell-free RNA production from S. cerevisiae nuclear polyhedrosis virus replicons. The addition of the cationic polypeptide VP16 to in vitro transcription reactions containing heterologous viral replicons encoding cytoplasmic polyadenylation sequences, resulted in the production of transcripts containing up to 13 and 40 adenine residues. The addition of VP16 increased transcription efficiency by up to two orders of magnitude. It was observed that in a small number of reactions, transcription was inhibited, presumably due to the presence of competitive endogenous transcripts which terminate at or before the site for the RNA template used to synthesize additional transcripts. In addition, the addition of VP16 resulted in the appearance of putative transcripts containing alternate acceptor sequences, which may result from an increase in the frequency of premature RNA termination events. The addition of VP16 also increased the efficiency with which heterologous replicons were transcribed by approximately one order of magnitude. Our results suggest that VP16 is involved in transcription of viral sequences that contain
