The Power of the Past - dnetesn ===== cmurf > Historically, few leaders have been as clear in the way they talk about > history, the past and their own sense of belonging, as Mr. Xi, a native of > the central province of Shaanxi, who as a student was described as an > “introverted and shy boy,” but later as a “brilliant and confident person.” > Over seven years in power, he has in some way become a stand-in for the > Chinese nation. I suspect the reason for this is simpler than the article implies. The article says: "Through his speeches, Mr. Xi has often portrayed the China of today as being more prosperous than the past. Most ordinary people understand that China is not wealthier now than it was a decade or two ago. But those who have modest wealth tend to have fond memories of the wealth they received a generation ago. And those who have little wealth, have little investment in the future, but have fond memories of even poorer times. For them, China as it is today is more prosperous than it was a generation ago. For someone like Xi who is a beneficiary of redistribution of wealth, it's c6a93da74d
